The Trump Presidency

Just hours before Trump's Inauguration Day, the President of the USA launched a memecoin called $TRUMP. The coin exploded right out of the gate, hitting a market cap of over $80 billion before insiders took profits, sending it down to $50 billion. This drop was partly fueled by liquidity flowing to another coin—$MELANIA—launched by his wife, Melania Trump.

Despite President Donald Trump omitting any mention of cryptocurrency in his inaugural speech and the White House's new priorities document, his actions suggest ongoing support for the crypto industry. Key moves include nominating pro-crypto figures like Paul Atkins as SEC Chair and David Sacks as the White House's "crypto czar." Additionally, World Liberty Financial, a project backed by the Trump family, recently acquired $47 million in cryptocurrencies, including Wrapped Bitcoin (WBTC), ETH, AAVE, LINK, TRX, and ENA. The choice of WBTC—a tokenized version of Bitcoin on the Ethereum blockchain—has sparked discussions about its strategic implications and potential market impact. These actions align with Trump's earlier promises to designate crypto as a national priority, create a Bitcoin reserve, and foster a favorable regulatory environment. His presidency signals potential opportunities for the crypto sector amidst broader economic policy shifts.

Ethereum Staking

The Proof-of-Stake Era On the technological front, Ethereum's transition to proof-of-stake (PoS) has cemented staking as a cornerstone of the blockchain ecosystem. Notably, the Ethereum Foundation, holding nearly 269,000 ETH valued at $891 million, is considering staking its assets. Historically cautious due to regulatory and fork-related risks, the Foundation is now exploring safer staking mechanisms, which could yield an estimated $26.2 million annually. This move aligns with recent efforts to decentralize and strengthen Ethereum's treasury, including allocating 50,000 ETH to a new multisig wallet for DeFi exploration. These changes come amid criticism of the Foundation's leadership and calls for greater engagement within the Ethereum ecosystem.

CBDCs

President Donald Trump's opposition to Central Bank Digital Currencies (CBDCs) is likely to end any chance of their development in the U.S., as he continues to emphasize privacy concerns and government control over personal finances. With support from his Cabinet and Republican Congress members, Trump has expressed strong resistance to CBDCs, suggesting that the U.S. doesn't need them given the existing financial infrastructure. Instead, there is a push toward stablecoins, with legislation advancing to regulate the sector. While other countries may continue their CBDC plans, experts argue that the U.S. could risk falling behind in certain areas of digital currency innovation.

little reminder for everyone here

GCR @GCRClassic · OP

General trading principle as we watch meme tokens pump

Within alt cycles, you should crank up risk when the trend first reverses, and begin to gradually protect capital as time passes

People lose because they do the exact opposite; slow early, and increasingly greedy with time not a great of interpretation of that tweet

It's been 750 days since I tweeted to long Solana at $10 and that BTC had bottomed at 16k; that was the time to full port and take max risk and it's been 250 days since I advocated to scale into high conviction tokens (BTC, SOL, Show more)

I don't believe bitcoin tops until it flips gold, and will likely be long bitcoin for the rest of my life, at varying levels of allocation (max was post FTX)

long USD is also a risky trade

Still believe in 10k ETH?

GCR @GiganticRebirth

will address this once, since it's asked so often

the answer is yes

I was very clear my target for 2030, otherwise I wouldn't have tweeted, "by 2030"

I've tweeted about ethereum once in the past 3 years; and at the time I tweeted about it, ethereum was in the 1000s; it's not 2030 yet, but you should still be up 3x since the last time I mentioned ETH
